Welcome back, readers! If you’ve just spent the mid-session break doing super chilling activities, getting some spring sun and being incredibly productive with all your assignments, you deserve some serious Hi-Lo! Not only am I totally jealous and full of regret (Week 9 Friday and Emily sucks), that 10,000 word assignment (ok, 3000 world) is staring me down, a constant reminder that the Finals marathon probably wasn’t the best idea. Have a similar story? I’m here to tell you that you actually shouldn’t worry too much. Take a chill pill- it’s Stress Less Week!

This week Arc is dedicated to making sure you take a break from the stress that can be uni and studying. We’ve got a feature on 10 ways to stress less to give you some tips on how to avoid that panic attack (page 8), and check out page 11 of the What’s On guide for the super relaxing events happening this week (think free massages, classical music and PLAY DOUGH!). We’ve also got an article on how to get green on campus, and a review of the most dreaded UNSW experience: the 895 bus line.

But the best UNSW experience? That would be working at Blitz (in my totally unbiased opinion)! Check out page 20 for ideas on how to apply for the roles of Blitz Editor, Designer, and the two reporter positions. I can’t speak for the designer and reporters, but being an editor is the craziest, most challenging, most rewarding experience of my UNSW degree (and no one ever called me Miranda Priestly). At least not to my face. We can’t wait to read your applications!

Gold

Krystal: Jobs at Bitz are up for grabs! Be sure to apply for, like, the best year ever!
Simon: Only four weeks left of semester? Yeah!
Padden: Now socks. Ugh!

Old

Padden: Only three more issues of Bitz. Looming unemployment, oy!
Krystal: Three. More. Weeks. Energy/intrest levels are at an all time low.
Simon: The break went WAY too fast. As usual.

Life-hacks

In supermarkets, the most expensive products are stocked at eye-level so you'll see them more easily. When shopping, look up and down - items on the highest or lowest shelves will be better deals.

@XplodingUnicorn

When most people say “I’m on a diet,” what they mean is, “I eat exactly as much as I normally do, but now I feel guilty about it.”

Random Factoid

On Good Friday in 1930, the BBC reported, “There is no news.” Instead, they played piano music.

“T’ll never say you aren’t Slim! Slim & beautiful: take it all off girls.”

To Lynette in second year engineering, you are the epitome of beauty and brains. According to the Unified Soil Classification System, you would be classified as either silt or clay because girl... you’re fine!

Taken from UNSW Love Letters

“T’ll never say you aren’t Slim! Slim & beautiful: take it all off girls.”

“I’m an assistant storyteller. It’s like being a waiter or a gas station attendant, but I’m waiting on six million people a week, if I’m lucky.”

-Harrison Ford
We here at Blitz love emerging artists, especially Sydneysiders from our own backyard. This week we chatted to Bondi boy Sam Yeldman, the brains behind Guineafowl, about uni, modest beginnings, and the guerrilla spirit taking the music industry by storm.

I thought we could wind back a few years to kick things off and talk about how Guineafowl started. What’s your origin story?

I started recording music in my flat in Bondi as I was finishing university. I was just using the microphone on my laptop, and that’s how I started recording all the tracks that later became my first EP. Then I realised it doesn’t sound very big without other players, so I had some musicians come on board to fill out the sound and play with me live, but the process has always remained the same. I still write music in the same way – on a computer, by myself, in a dark room. It’s just that the computer is a bit bigger and there’s a couple more microphones now.

You mentioned that you were at uni. What were you studying and did you graduate?

Journalism. I did end up graduating. I still work in media but I moonlight as a musician.

My next question is one that a lot of artists hate, but for people that haven’t heard your stuff before, how would you describe your sound?

It’s a hard thing to describe. Big. Layered. Those sorts of words. It’s a mix of a lot of different kinds of ideas. I like live music but I also like electronic music, so it’s a bit of a mix between both of them I think. It’s somewhere in between a massive band sound, but also with electronic stuff on top.

You mentioned writing in a dark room, but what’s your actual writing process like?

I’m a really slow writer. I start off with a musical idea that tickles me a bit. Or, a lyric will come to me straight away, or I’ll work on something to go along with that musical idea. From there it’s like building blocks, like putting together a little painting. You start with the base colours then add more and more and more until you think it’s finished.

You played Splendour in the Grass in 2011 and have toured with some huge names in the music industry – what’s been the highlight so far?

Splendour was incredible, but playing in my favourite venues in Sydney is probably the highlight. I love Sydney. I’ve pretty much played everywhere except Enmore and the Opera House, so those are my goals. It’s always been good in Sydney… I was on tour, started, that was jumping on me and helping me so much. I’m a Sydney boy.

Can you tell me about some of the major difficulties you faced in breaking into the music industry?

I’m still breaking. Music is very difficult. It yields very little financial support. Having a live band with you makes it even more difficult. You need to find reasons that compel you to make music and play gigs. Music and recording music is the fun bit, everything else is a challenge.

So do you have any advice for aspiring artists?

Go through community radio first. Go through FB, go to blogs, go see people who are also emerging. It’s a really big community, and since you’re navigating that community you find these amazing people who want to help you. Keep it guerrilla!

Tips:

So you've just come back from a weeklong vacay. Your skin is bronzed, you're totes chilled, and then you remember – there's only three more weeks until the end of the semester. Postpone your freak out, kids. It's Stress Less Week at UNSW, a time to remind you to take a chill pill and not let anxiety get the best of you. Here are some quick fixes to help you de-stress in the lead up to exams, major essays and always horrific group assignments.

Blow Up a Balloon

While giving people a plastic sack of your breath for their birthday is uber weird and creepy, blowing up balloons is apparently great for decreasing stress. Your body really likes oxygen, and inflating balloons makes great for decreasing stress. Your body really likes oxygen, and inflating balloons makes a lot of you probably still have that shape of an adorable puppy.

Eat Your Feelings

While the obesity epidemic is likely caused by people following this exact advice, we figure that a lot of you probably still have pretty decent metabolisms. Make the most of it while you can. The more aggressive you can get when consuming your comfort food of choice, the better. Tough foods like ribs, toffee and crab claws will help you vent your pent up aggression and fill your ribs, toffee and crab claws will help you feel like a reanimated corpse.

Chew Gum

Fancy scientific studies have discovered that chewing gum aids alertness, improves multi-tasking and reduces anxiety. If you need something to help you escape from the black hole that is Reddit, gum could be the answer. Grab a pack of Extra or Hubba Bubba and get chewing! Just don't overdose it. Chewing too much gum can have a nasty laxative effect. Starting in your pants is probably going to increase your anxiety, so take it easy!

Naps might not accomplish much in the way of productivity, but what they lack in efficiency they make up for in lessening worldsuck. Waking up from a nap will leave you feeling refreshed, recharged and ready to take on that shifty assignment you've been avoiding. Just make sure you make it a quickie – five hour 'naps' almost always leave you feeling like a reanimated corpse.

Hug It Out

A lot of people travel far away from their families to study at uni, which means way less hugs on a day-to-day basis. This may not be a problem if you're a misanthrope, but a lot of humans seem to get stressed out by a lack of physical contact with other humans. While we don't suggest groping strangers on bussses to fill your touchy-feely quota, we do suggest hugging the following things as much as possible: trees, puppies, pillows and, wherever possible, human friends.

Have Some Sex

If you're lucky enough to have a friend with benefits, a boyfriend/girlfriend, or a booty call on speed dial, having a little sexy time can be an ideal way to reduce stress. Kissing releases all kinds of happy chemicals in the brain and sex apparently lowers your blood pressure, burns calories and boosts your self-esteem. It's basically a core-act for a lot of mental maladies, so go ahead and dance the mattress mambo.

Be a Kid Again

Growing up is shit. Sure there's some cool stuff, like wine and being the master of your own chocolate intake, but to get these you have to trade off things like trampolines and face painting and blowing bubbles. If you're stressed, set aside an afternoon to just do cool, childish shit. Go outside and lay in the grass. Eat McNuggets and fish fingers. Skip. Braid your hair. Finger paint. Be infinitely curious about the world.

Punch Stuff

Getting out all your pent up stress in the form of physical aggression is a great way to release tension. If you can't make it to the gym to wail on a punching bag, try beating the shit out of your bed with a pillow. We do not recommend punching walls, windows or people, as this may only provide further stress (not to mention pain).

F This Shit

Swearing has been shown to decrease both stress and pain, which explains why I cursed like a sailor when I worked in retail. If stress is getting the best of you, grit your teeth and spew a long string of obscenities. The F word is particularly efficient at stress relief, so feel free to insert it into every pre-exam conversation you have. Maybe don't write it on your test paper though.

RECYCLE

There are so many ways to recycle on campus that it’s pretty much impossible not to do it. You’ve probably seen the giant recycling bins littered around the campus (which themselves are made from recycled goods!), but there are plenty of other ways to engage in this hot trend. Batteries can out of juice? The uni will recycle them. Upgraded to a new phone? The uni will take the old one off your hands. Feeling a tad thirsty and in the mood for some H2O? Fill up your old bottle at one of the countless campus bubblers.

ENVIRIO COLLECTIVE MEETINGS

If you’re gaga for planet Earth and wanna meet some peeps of the same mindset, get yourself to an enviro collective meeting. The collective is comprised of super passionate students who are nuts about the environment and want to make sure that UNSW remains an environmentally conscious and sustainable joint. Run by the SRC Enviro Officer, the collective meets once a week and are always on the hunt for new, like-minded members.

The best part about this place is everything has been donated by other students, who would rather see their favourite folder go to a good home than end up as some rat’s home in a landfill.

CHEAP A$$ SYDNEY

Australians tend to be pretty opinionated on the subject of travel, especially when it comes to Sydney. If you’re on a budget, there’s no denying the science; the climate is changing kids, and if you don’t want to be forced to move underground to hide from searing heat, it’s time you take a ride on the sustainability train. But do you find yourself praying nightly to Captain Planet, asking for guidance and unsure of how you can help save the earth? Blitz has uncovered some of the best ways to unleash your inner greenie right here on campus!

Wingman Tips

PA EXTRODINAIRE
A wingman is basically a glorified personal assistant who must do everything in their power to make sure their friend’s is in peak condition. If they have a bit of food stuck in their teeth, pick it out for them. If they have a runny nose and there isn’t a tissue in sight, wipe it on your own clothes so they don’t get any unsavory stains on their chosen attire. Whatever you have to do to get them looking like a supermodel, do it.

HAVE YOU MET...?
If your associate is a tad shy, or newly single and out of touch with the dating scene, it is wise to give them one hell of an introduction. Take a leaf out of Barney Stinson’s book and throw your buddy into the deep end, they may founder at first, but they’re sure to thank you later when they score a hot date.

SUPER SLEUTH
If the object of your pal’s affections has some chums of their own nearby, it is up to you to buddy up to them and suss the situation out as best you can. This way, you can whisper into your pal’s ear or sit the situation out as best you can. This way, you can buddy up to them and suss the situation out as best you can. If the object of your pal’s affections has some chums of their own nearby, it is up to you to buddy up to them and suss the situation out as best you can.

COMPLIMENTS AHOY!
Nobody is gonna go fo’ a quo or gal if they think they are a bit of a loser. If your job is to let your pal’s romantic interest know just how much of a mega cool person they really are. They volunteer with underprivileged children? Tell them. Their bedroom behaviours are of urban legend proportions? Tell them. If you are going to stretch the truth a tad, make sure you keep it semi-believable. No one is going to believe a 20 year old student has whilsted a Hollywood blockbuster or been on a mission to mars.

HAN SOLO
When your chum and their love interest are starting to look like they are becoming well acquainted, it’s essential you slip into the shadows and give them some quality alone time. It’s not like one of them is going to make a move if you are still awkwardly standing next to them, breathing heavily. A true wingman knows when their job is done and excuses themselves from the situation.
In the ten years between her crime and punishment, Piper has grown into what initially was a more upper than middle class life with her fiancé, Larry. These qualities have clearly not been lost on others. When Piper was sent to a small farm in northern Iceland. Convicted for her part in the murders of two men, one of which was her lover and employer, Agnes is waiting out the days before her execution, living with a local family.

In the bitter cold of Iceland’s winter, the family of the farm (Margaret, Jon and their two daughters) work hard to sustain themselves. As they work, they eat, and the family mixes with the locals, trying to understand their lives and their struggles. Margaret, who is the main character in this story, has a story to tell. She is a woman who has lived a life of hard work and struggle, but who has also found moments of joy and happiness. She is a woman who has learned to appreciate the simple things in life, even when times are tough.

There is passion in this cash grab. This passion doesn't come just because it doesn't apply, but because it's irrelevant. People won't see this for groundbreaking cinema; they'll see it for its shortcomings. It doesn't matter how good or bad the acting is, or how well-dressed the cast looks. If it's not entertaining, it's not good. And if it's not good, then it's not worth your time. So if you're looking for something new and different, then look elsewhere. But if you're in the mood for a good old-fashioned movie, then this is the one for you.

a-mazing

BRIGHTSIDE is a mentoring program pairing COFA students with disadvantaged High School students around Sydney in an effort to inspire them through a series of creative projects. Blitz chatted to BRIGHTSIDE Coordinator Miranda Samuels to learn more.

BRIGHTSIDE has to be one of the most creative volunteering programs on campus. What can you tell me about it?

We started it at the end of 2012, working with some kids out in Campbelltown on some projects. We made some murals and redesigned/redeveloped their canteena.

It’s kind of like combining creativity with a mentoring program, and was something that the teachers, the community and all the kids out there responded really well to. Since COFA is a creative sort of university, it’s worked really really well there, giving an opportunity for creative students to share their talents and help disengaged, disadvantaged kids to pick up creative skills that they’ll hopefully take with them for the rest of their lives.

So why do you decide to start the program?

Nick Chadwick and I (who also runs D2MG) thought that a program combining a mentorship with young people at uni and disadvantaged kids having trouble at school could be a really good opportunity for students at uni to get involved. For the school students I think it’s awesome to have people at uni coming into their lives, a lot of them don’t have anyone talking to them about the possibilities of a tertiary education or what they are going to do after school.

How important do you think programs such as BRIGHTSIDE are within society?

Referencing statistics that we have found while pitching the program, around 80% of juvenile crime occurs within the first six months of disengagement from schooling. When you hear those sorts of statistics and then you see programs like BRIGHTSIDE that are actually engaging kids, I think that you can definitely draw a conclusion that programs such as this are necessary.

D2MG

Hip hop hit! Hip hop anonymous? This week Blitz talked to D2MG president Justin Padilla about UNW’s bubbling urban youth culture. Can you give us a rundown of what D2MG is all about?

D2MG is a society that focuses on hip hop culture. Our name is derived from the four main elements: dance, DJ, MC and graffiti. Our aim is to grow the campus scene and spread the awareness and love of hip hop, which would also hopefully impact the Sydney hip hop community as a whole. Hip hop is not just a genre of music or a label of dancing; it’s a rich culture that dates way back.

Why are societies like D2MG important for students?

We’re important as a gateway for new students entering uni life to meet new people at social events with a common appreciation of music, dance and culture. Hip hop as a culture advocates acceptance of people of all creeds and walks of life. D2MG promotes that very same acceptance by encouraging personal expression through various outlets, centred primarily on dance.

What type of skills can people expect to learn if they get involved?

The amount of commitment and involvement determines what sort of skills a member will pick up. We’ve been running workshops where professional teachers come to UNSW to teach dance, DJing and beatboxing.

How can people join?

Find us around at all the various classes and events we host and fill in a registration form for membership – it’s only $5 and will last for a year.

Do you have any events coming up that people should know about?

We run D2MGs every week – we currently offer dance, beatboxing and tagging classes. Our major event coming up is BEATDOWN, a dance battle event that brings together university societies and the local Sydney Dance Scene.

Shoot D2MG an e-mail at d2mg.unsw@gmail.com to find out where they’ll be hip hopping around campus.

Get Involved!

Creative skills that they’ll hopefully take with them as well as valuable work experience from there on out. They’ll also hopefully be inspired to go out there and pursue their own hobbies in the living world.

Some programs have a high chance of getting students involved when they are still at school. They then don’t have anyone talking to them about the possibilities of a tertiary education or what they are going to do after school.

So why do you think programs such as BRIGHTSIDE are within society?

Referencing statistics that we have found while pitching the program, around 80% of juvenile crime occurs within the first six months of disengagement from schooling.
